

General Education Students First

- Students who have dyslexia are “general education students” first
- Can be educated in general education classrooms
- Benefit from a wide variety of supports
  - comprehensive, evidence-based approach to reading and language instruction that is implemented by trained educators
  - various accommodations and assistive technology
- Students with dyslexia sometimes require special education.

