- Visits to a pediatric specialist without a general dentist's referral through age 13
- Comprehensive orthodontic coverage, including clear aligners
- Tooth-colored fillings on front and back teeth if your child develops a cavity

To have your child see a pediatric dentist:

If your child has not been assigned a general dentist, they can visit a DeltaCare USA pediatric dentist without a referral. If your child already has a general dentist assigned, they will need to obtain a referral to a DeltaCare USA pediatric dentist from their assigned general dentist to be sure care is covered. Your child can see a DeltaCare USA pediatric dentist through age 13.

Why does my child need dental care?

Even if your child doesn't have teeth yet, it's still important that they go see a pediatric dentist around the age of 1. Pediatric dentists are specially trained in children's oral health and know how to make young patients feel comfortable in the dentist's chair. They treat dental issues specific to little mouths from infancy through the teen years.

At your child's first visit:

- You'll learn how to care for your baby's new teeth.
- The dentist will also look for issues such as an undiagnosed cleft palate.

Around 2 years of age:

- The dentist will check your toddler's new teeth for any problems.
- They'll get a complete oral evaluation, including a search for any early cavities.
- Typically, a cleaning will not be required unless there is a significant problem.

Around 3 years of age and on:

- It's time for a full dental visit! Your child will likely get x-rays, cleaning and fluoride treatments and evaluated for cavities. Your dentist will discuss treatment options.
- Cleanings and exams will continue every six months going forward, similar to adults.
- The dentist will evaluate your child for orthodontic needs at every visit because changes during this age are rapid.

Ages 7-13

- The dentist will refer your child to an orthodontist for evaluation as early as 7-9 years of age if they see problems. Otherwise, they'll be referred to an orthodontist at age 11-12 when they get their 12-year molars if needed.
- Once primary molars appear, the dentist will recommend sealants to prevent cavities, usually between the ages of 7-12.
